HENDLEY-KASPAR PUPILS IN RECITAL

Program Ranging Through Classic and Ultra-Modern Earns Appreciation.

Henry Kaspar, pianist, gave his spring piano recital by students of the Hendley-Kaspar School of Musical Education in the ballroom of the Willard Hotel last evening, appearing as a soloist and in several two-piano recitals of concerted work by his pupils.

Holding this as a student's example of the interpretive side of music, the program ranged through the classics and the ultra-moderns. Margaret Millham, in Beethoven's C sharp minor sonata, showed a broad command of both the technique and the music. This little artist plays in the larger mold with a nice sense of proportion and singing musical tone. She builds this forceful sonata in masterly manner up to a sweeping and gratifying climax. She also gave the first movement of the Grieg A minor concerto, with Mr. Kaspar at the second piano. It held the faithful of the music and was given excellent execution.

Miss O'Dea has a facility of expression that was shown well in a Glazounow Etude and in all the lit and life of Percy Grainger's "Shepherd's Hey." Miss Buchanan gave breadth and understanding in a Piere concerto, one movement, and in the Rameau-Godowsky "Tambourin" and Grainger's "Molly on the Shore." Bargarite Ami, in a Debussy prelude, played with excellent contrast, finding the value of Debussy harmonies in excellent chord work. While little Nancy Spalding, in a two-piano "Romance" of Arensky, illustrated the sincere interpretation brought out by the little folks.

The program included Cyril Scott and Beringer selections played by Katherine Bowman, and Debussy numbers given by Sally Finney and Mary Lewis.

Mr. Kaspar supplemented the two piano work with interpretations full of tone, color and atmosphere. As soloist he played the Strauss-Schott G major "Valse-Paraphrase" and a "Russian Tarantelle" of Lisapounov, in which his technique reached a whirlwind facility that was ever clear in concept and execution.

The next recital on Saturday, April 17, at 8 o'clock, will be at the Willard, when Mrs. Hendley will present the Younger Students of Music Perception, assisted by Miss Margaret Millham, pianist.

FLETCHER DENIES NAVY WAS UNFIT

Former Ship Commander in France Takes Direct Issue With Sims' Charges.

Rear Admiral F. F. Fletcher, former commander of the naval forces in France, today took direct issue with Admiral Sims on the latter's charges that the navy was "unprepared," and that "delay cost thousands of lives and millions of tons of shipping."

Before the Senate investigating committee Admiral Fletcher branded the charge that "the Navy Department is responsible for the loss of two and a half million tons of shipping and billions of dollars, with half a million lives," as "having no foundation in fact" and "wholly without value."

"No one will maintain that our navy was 100 per cent prepared for war," Admiral Fletcher said. "No navy ever has been or ever will be fully prepared for war, in the minds of all. But from my knowledge of other navies, there is no question in my mind but that the United States navy, notwithstanding its shortcomings when it entered the war, was just as well prepared as any other navy in the world when the great war burst forth."

Admiral Fletcher, while admitting the "plausibility" of sending all available small craft across at once, pointed to the dangers of thus leaving our coasts unprotected, as Sims had advocated.

Reverting again to Sims' charge that the navy was responsible for loss of life and shipping, Fletcher said that if our small forces were blamed for all that loss, the allies were culpable for an even greater degree, as they had 95 per cent of the forces.

Taking up another Sims' charge, that we had no plan, Fletcher said that the general board of the navy, two years before our entry into war, prepared "a comprehensive plan for conducting war against central Europe, covering every phase of an assumed war."

Pointing out that the war was won on the western front, Fletcher said it was the navy's mission to get troops there, and that this was done "as fast as the men could board the ships."

EVEN THE FESTIVE HEN NATIONALIZED IN RUSSIA

Lenin's Passion For Controlling Things Makes Him Chase Chickens.

Eggs have been nationalized in Soviet Russia. Leading the world in new and bizarre movements from conscription of labor to the nationalization of industries, Soviet Russia has now made a bold attempt to solve the problem of high cost of living. Even the festive hen must yield to the passion for nationalization and must lay according to the new twelve-hour day an important portion which will suit the people commissars.

Nikolai Lenin is not too busy to give attention to these minor details. The decree bringing the egg and the hen under government control is signed by this new style statesman. The moment the Russian hen lays the precious egg it is apportioned and distributed not to the people generally, but to the Soviets. The decree especially states how many eggs shall be delivered from each section to the Soviets. Information to this effect received today by the Department of State gives no intimation, however, that the crowing of chancellery is to be regulated by government authority.
